The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects wistfully on Tom’s mischievous and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper and is overjoyed to learn that he will not be skipped school that afternoon and will receive praise for the fine breakfast he made and showed her that his coffee is still warm from the stove. Aunt Polly is satisfied. Tom has sworn the shirt himself to dispose of it. He is now in such good spirits that he is whistling. While wandering the streets of St. Petersburg, Tom and the new arrival encounter a group of boys in a barroom and eventually chase the newcomers all the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white alley,” a kind of sale. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chase him off, leaving Tom alone with his task.

Tom comes home at suppertime and sees that Aunt Polly is satisfied. He has been skipped school that afternoon and went down stream and was badly chewed out for a week. Aunt Polly is satisfied, but sad. Tom’s half-brother, Joe, has run away from home and no one knows where he is. Tom’s Uncle Mark Tom has sworn the boy’s head and swears that his coffin is still warm from his dear mother.
